1. Jive with something (phrasal verb) - ex)

"But, often when people hear this conclusion from the research, they say it doesn't sound right, it doesn't jive with their experience."

2. Conceal (verb) - ex)

"When I ask people about secrets they've never told anyone about, and how often they've had to conceal them, they say that they've only had to conceal them about two times on average of the past month."

3. Bandwidth (noun) - ex)

"During the midst of a concealment episode, you don't have the bandwidth or the time to think about all the ways in which a secret hurts you."

4. Make a world of difference (phrase) - ex)

"And if you have a secret that's upsetting you or you're not sure what to do, the one clear recommendation I can give is talk to someone else about that secret. You don't have to reveal it to the person you're keeping it from, but talking about it with someone else can make the world of difference."

5. Hold back (phrasal verb) - ex)

"When we keep a secret, we're often trying to protect something...But, when we hold back from other people, it's not always protecting it."

6. Be better off (phrase) - ex)

"Our secrets don't have to hurt us, and once we understand them better, we can understand how to better cope with them- which ones we might be better off revealing, and, essentially, just how to move forward."

2. Listening Drill

Before my research, the idea of how _____ secrets hurt us was very simple: For decades and decades, psychologists have said that the reason secrets harm our health and well-being is because of the stress of hiding something _____.

But, often when people hear this conclusion from the research, they say it doesn't sound right, it doesn't jive with their experience.

First of all, those situations don't look like anything like in the real world. In those situations, the person is asked to conceal a secret, and the other person in the room was instructed to ask questions directly related to the secret. That turns out to not be a common situation.

When I ask people about secrets they've never told anyone about, and how often they've had to conceal them, they say that they've only had to conceal them about two times on average of the past month.

But when I ask, "How many times has someone asked you about this secret?" They'll say about once in the past month. Meaning, _____ we're concealing a secret, nobody asked us a question about it at all.

And so, the reason why concealing a secret in a social interaction is not as stressful as we've long imagined, is that the average experience of concealing a secret is an easy one.

When you're concealing a secret, it's actually this useful situation because you just carefully attend to what you're saying, and how the other person is responding.

During _____ a concealment episode, you don't have the _____ or the time to think about all the ways in which a secret hurts you.

And so, what we've learned from 10 years of my research is that, actually, the hard part of having a secret is not that we have to hide it, it's that we have to live with it alone in our thoughts.

And when you're alone in your thoughts, your mind can go to more harmful places.

When we ask people about their most pressing secret, they'll say that they definitely think about that secret about 20 times in a week _____.

And if you have a secret that's upsetting you or you're not sure what to do, the one clear recommendation I can give is talk to someone else about that secret. You don't have to reveal it to the person you're keeping it from, but talking about it with someone else can _____.

When we keep a secret, we're often trying to protect something. Maybe we're trying to protect ourselves or what other people think of us. But, when _____ other people, it's not always protecting it.

Our secrets can hurt our relationships, our health, and our well-being in so many ways- but we don't have to be alone in our thoughts.

Our secrets don't have to hurt us, and once we understand them better, we can understand how to better cope with them- which ones we might be _____ revealing, and, essentially, just how to move forward.
